"P. D. Q."

THE STORY

A bike racer, known as "P. D. Q." but whose entry number in the $10,000 bicycle marathon is "C. O. D." goes to bed the night before the big race after receiving a final rub-down from his trainer. His manager tells him to set his alarm for 6:30 A. M., so he will be at the starting place in good time. The next morning "P. D. Q." gets the lead in the race from the very outset. He turns a traffic signal to read "Stop" and delays his opponents while he aids a young girl to elude her irate father who wants her to marry a man she hates.

"P. D. Q." sends her father in the wrong direction and resumes the contest. Just as he is getting well in front again, he hears cries for help coming from a house, rides in and helps a woman rescue her pet monkey which has started to wreck the place.

Another delay occurs. He meets the young girl fleeing from her father. Her car is stuck in a mudhole. He helps her get out and is able to keep the lead in the race. A runaway team next occupies him and he is again overtaken. He gets far ahead of the other racers, but is waylaid by an escaping convict who forces him to change clothes. He is

He again dashes into the lead, but is delayed by helping to pull a stalled flivver from a creek. He starts off as the rest of the racers come up; but they all run head-over-heels in enough by the keeper and impressed into a prison road-gang. Through an amusing sequence of events he again enters the race and dashes to the fore. He overtakes the young girl as she is being forced to marry her father's choice. He kidnaps her and carries her off in a stolen baby carriage together with the clergyman who marries them as he sits on the handle-bars.

The other racers overtake them and in a neck-and-neck sprint down the home stretch "P. D. Q." wins and—"P. D. Q." wakes up to find his manager bawling him out for having slept through the alarm clock and missed the race.
